Record attendance at 2014 Direct Sales Conference

PartyLite wins prestigious ASTRA Award

The Annual European Direct Sales Conference enjoyed a record attendance of 170 participants from Europe and other parts of the world. In parallel, there was a growth in sponsors, service providers, speakers and workshops.

In his opening speech, Seldia Chairman Magnus Brännstrom, just re-elected for a second 2-year term, highlighted the growth of the industry in terms of sales and workforce during 2013. WFDSA Chairman Alessandro Carlucci then emphasized the importance of a good branding strategy for the industry, which would address the younger generations.

Two panels followed the Chairmen's presentations. From the CEO panel:

Peter Strydom of Amway: "The most important factor in our industry are ethical behavior and the codes of conduct. In this regard, the direct selling associations across Europe are very important, and Seldia in particular."

Martin Koehler of PartyLite: "It is evident that the success of our industry lies in embracing innovation and social media."

Alessandro Carlucci of Natura : "What is special about direct selling, is that all companies involved regularly meet in a friendly atmosphere. This is a strength in this sector."

Patrice Jacuelin of Guy Demarle: "The direct selling model fits well in modern times and it remains a perfect distribution model to generate sales".

At the branding panel, both Sara de Dios of Havas Communications Group and Tom Harms of Herbalife underlined that a brand should offer more than recognition for the consumer. As the session moderator Ben Woodward of Nikken captured it: "Successful brands offer a sense of 'community' and 'belonging' to the consumer".

Prof. Dr. Jules Stuyck and consumer representative Amel Haikem of Association Léo Lagrange presented Seldia's new European website for consumer complaints, www.fairselling.eu, which was welcomed as an excellent illustration for the industry's commitment to work with consumers and to offer an accessible resolution for any dispute that may arise.
