

Direct Selling: A Vibrant Retail Channel in Europe

Direct Selling is...

Direct selling is a method of marketing and retailing goods and services directly to the consumers, in their homes or in any other location away from permanent retail premises. It is usually conducted in a face-to-face manner, either where products are demonstrated to an individual, or to a group or where a catalogue is left with the consumer and where the direct seller calls later to collect orders. Unlike direct marketing or mail order, direct selling is based principally on personal contact with the customer.

A key characteristic of direct selling is the role of the independent salesperson in the distribution of products and services. These salespeople affiliate with a direct selling company, but retain the freedom to run a business on their own terms, including how much time and effort to put into building the business.

People involved in direct selling choose to become involved and stay in direct selling for many different reasons. These include being able to buy products they like at a discounted price and the opportunity to earn supplemental income. While some people run successful full-time direct selling businesses, for the majority of people involved in direct selling the revenue earned is not their primary income, but a way to make extra money to fund a holiday, education or just to provide some extra spending money.

Ethics in Direct Selling

Seldia attaches great importance to ensuring the highest ethical standards for the direct selling sector in Europe. In this regard, Seldia adopted its first European Codes of Conduct in 1995. The Codes are regularly updated to reflect evolution in the market place, such as the digital evolution, or changes in consumer habits. In April 2018, an updated version of the European Codes of Ethics was adopted to ensure that the relationships between companies, direct sellers and consumers are based on trust and fairness. Each of Seldia's 28 national direct selling associations is required to incorporate the substance of the provisions of these Codes into its national Ethics Codes. All Seldia member companies and any direct selling company which is a member of one of the Seldia's national direct selling associations are required to follow the Seldia Codes of Conduct.

The European Code Administrator: complying with the Alternative Dispute Resolution Directive

The European Code Administrator (ECA) is a body that handles complaints between consumers and direct selling companies, after all other remedies have failed. The ECA includes a committee of four members: three representatives of the direct selling sector and a qualified independent person acting as Chairperson of that committee.

The Code is a result of the direct selling industry's continuous commitment to set and maintain high ethical standards and fair consumer practices across 28 EU Member States

Direct Selling Outlook

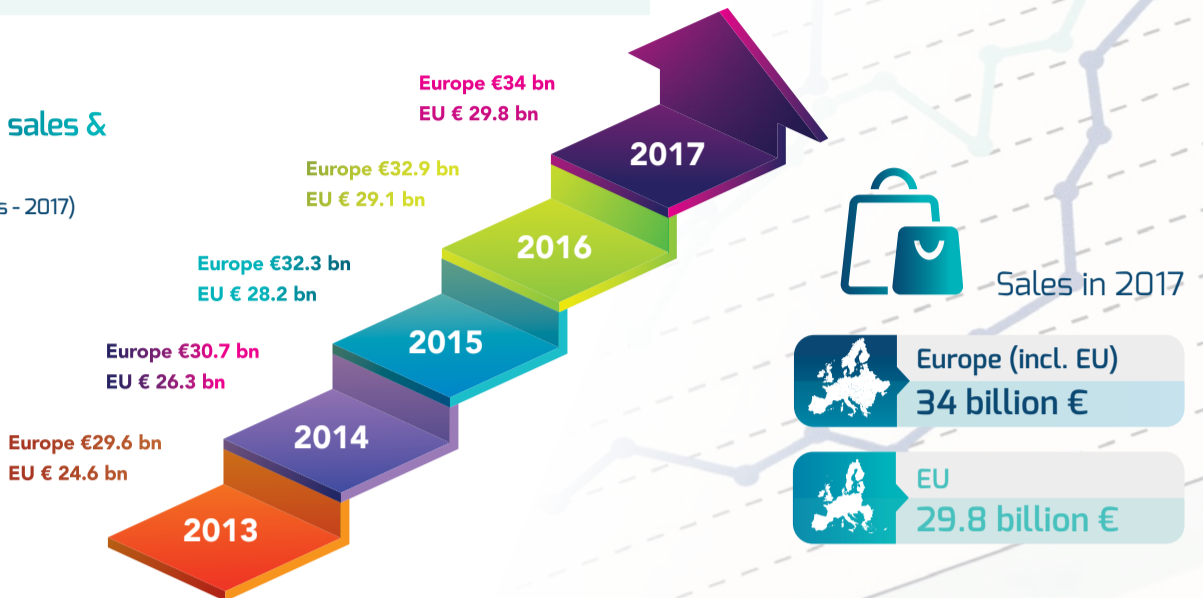

While direct selling is, like all retail, impacted by the current macro-socio economic downturn, the 2017 sales results show that the industry's retail model is still strong and that direct selling is in a good position to grow its business further in the coming years. European retail sales in direct selling have shown a constant growth over the last years and in 2017 direct selling sales grew by 3% in Europe and in the European Union by 2.4%.

Which products are sold via direct selling?

Direct selling is suited to the sale and distribution of almost every category of consumer goods that can be found in traditional retail locations and department stores. Wellness products remain the top category sold in direct selling with 33% of market shares, while cosmetics and personal care products progress with 31% of market shares. Other product ranges enjoy a stable growth, showing that direct selling is perfectly placed to respond to the increasing demand to provide more consumer-oriented products and services.
